REBECCA I.O.O.F. GIVES BANQUET

About 150 Members Met in Their Rooms and Enjoy Feast of Music, Wit and Good Things.

To celebrate the first anniversary of the establishment of the Rebecca Lodge I. O. O. F. in Monessen, the members, their wives and friends indulged in a sumptuous banquet in their rooms in opera house hall last evening. Preceeding the spread an especially pleasing musical program was carried out. Miss Alice Stevens, the noted contralto singer, of Pittsburg, was engaged for the occasion, and favored the audience with several selections. Miss Stevens who has traveled extensively through both this country and Europe delighted those present by her beautiful voice, calling forth commendation from all. Miss Elizabeth Kiech also sang several pleasing solos, followed by a duet by Messrs. J. C. and J. H. Williams, recitations by Miss Annie Sprouse and Miss Emma Lloyd and piano solos by Miss Evans and Miss Annie Miller, concluded the program.

Those present numbering 150 or more were then seated at the banquet tables which were tastefully garnished and a spread which will long be remembered by those present was partaken of. There was an abundance of good things which were throughly enjoyed by all. Wit and good cheer flowed freely and all in all a most delightful time was spent.

Following the feast the tables were cleared away, old and new games were indulged in, in which both young and old joined. Altogether a more pleasant evening or a more delightful time could not be imagined. Later goodnights were said and the merry party parted for their homes feeling that they had enjoyed an unusually pleasant evening.

The rooms were handsomely decorated for the occasion and the committee in charge deserve praise for the commendable manner in which the evenings entertainment passed off.

Annual Spring Opening at Janovitz's Millinery Store Drew a Large Crowd Last Evening.

The Easter season in all its glory was lavishly depicted last evening in the store of M Janovitz on Schoonmaker avenue, the doors being thrown open for the annual spring opening

An annual occurrence with this well known firm, their object each year is to eclipse if possible the success of the previous season and this time they certainly outdid themselves in both the decorative work which was really magnificent, and the especially fine showing of Easter millinery.

No expense or pains was spared in decorations and the magnificent display was certainly pleasing to the sight and drew favorable comments from the immense crowds in attendance, notwithstanding the unfavorable weather conditions

During the evening sweet strains of music dispensed by a hidden orchestra enlivened the occasion. Souvenirs were presented to the ladies.

He Was in Such a Hurry.

A man who has resided in Cairo told this tale as an illustration of the dilatory ways of Arabian trades people:

"A certain gentleman ordered a swing to be erected in his garden for the use of his little boy, aged six. He waited and waited, but the swing never arrived. In due course of time that boy grew up to man's estate and became himself the father of a little boy. When his son was six years old he remembered how his own father had ordered a swing to be made for him. So he called on the tradesman, who lived at his gate, and asked him to send up the swing that had been ordered twenty years before. The man agreed to do so. The little boy becoming impatient after three weeks, his father called again and remonstrated with the Arabian as to his dilatoriness. The indignant tradesman replied that he could not really undertake to serve any one who was in such a fearful hurry."

How to Use Brains.

A head man in a manufactory was watching a drayman tugging at a heavy case one day. The drayman's face was red, and the muscles of his neck were bulging. The overseer, says a writer in the Baltimore Sun, thought it was the right moment to offer practical assistance.

"Wait a minute there," he said. "Let me show you how easy it is when you use a little brain with your muscle." And he grabbed a hook, stuck it into the case, gave a yank and went sprawling into the gutter under the dray. He got up, looked at the hook and said, "Confound it, the handle comes off!"

"Yes, sir," said the drayman respectfully, "My brain told me that, and I didn't use it."

A Lucky Circumstance.

In the house of commons no incident is greeted with more hearty laughter than that of a member who, after an eloquent oration, plumps down on his silk hat on the bench behind him. A young member who had just made his maiden speech sat upon his new silk hat. There were roars of laughter. An Irish member immediately arose and gravely said, "Mr. Speaker, permit me to congratulate the honorable gentleman upon the happy circumstance that when he sat on his hat his head was not in it!" This remark upset the dignity of the house, and the speaker called "Order, order," amid roars of laughter.

Safe For a Short Distance.

A young man who is blessed with a Scotch kinsman need never fear that he will be allowed to hold too high an opinion of himself.

"What do you think of my project to study law?" asked young Witherby of his great-uncle, Robert Donaldson, a person whom he was desirous to propitiate.

"I should call it a very harmless amusement," said Mr. Donaldson dryly after a comprehensive survey of the young man's fatuous face and gay attire, "if not carried too far."

A Good Excuse.

After the Duke of Wellington's victorious campaigns the University of Oxford complimented the duke himself and his principal officers by conferring upon them the honorary and not very appropriate degree of doctor of civil laws. At that time the fees were heavy, and one of the distinguished soldiers, who had gathered more honor than profit in the wars, declined the proffered degree in the following verse:

Oxford, I know you wish me well,
But prithee let me be.
I can't, alas, be D. C. L.
For want of £ s. d.

Tradition.

What an enormous "camera obscura" magnifier is tradition. How a thing grows in the human memory, in the human imagination, when love, worship and all that lies in the human heart are there to encourage it, and in the darkness, in the entire ignorance, without date or document, no book, no Arundel marble, only here and there some dull monumental cairn.—Carlyle.

Violence.

Violence ever defeats its own ends. Where you cannot drive you can always persuade. A gentle word, a kind look, a good natured smile, can work wonders and accomplish miracles. There is a sweet pride in every human heart that recoils at tyranny. You may startle and drive an individual, but you won't make him respect you.—L. Sill.

Just a Dig.

Proud Mother—Professor Octave called at our house today, and my daughter played the piano for him. He just raved over her playing. Her Neighbor—How rude! Why couldn't he conceal his feelings just as the rest of us do?

The Great Nerve Tonic

Read this letter

Gallen, Mich.

Gentlemen: I bought three bottles of your medicine from my druggist. The medicine rendered me very good service, but I am sorry to say that the druggists here are all sold out of your medicine. I should have bought six bottles instead of three. I will gladly take six bottles of the Nervine and Blood Tonic, and request that you write me, if you are able to read this, for I am rather old to write. I have suffered six years from NERVOUS TROUBLE, caused by a fall, and my whole body remained in a tremble, but no pain. Every doctor I consulted failed to help me, and I was compelled to give up all housework. Then I read your advertisement and bought your medicine, and almost immediately after commencing its use I was a new woman. I hope you will write me at once, and tell me how much money I must send, as I am anxious to get to using your medicine again soon. With most hearty regards, I remain,

MRS. MARIE A. PRENKERT.

A MERE COWBOY

By HONORE WILLSIE

Copyright, 1905, by Beatrix Reade

To Edith's eastern eyes the ranch was a most fascinating place. The wide, rolling stretches of plain, flat and brown under the autumn skies; the lean cottonwoods, whose scant shade was a mere joke, and the ranch house itself, roomy, low and ugly, were all beautiful in her eyes.

If you had told Edith that this strange fascination was due to the undeniable charms of a certain tall cowboy who had recently been made foreman of her brother's ranch she would have tossed her pretty head at you and denied your insinuations scornfully.

"What," she had exclaimed when her sister-in-law had slyly remarked on the regularity of Edith's morning rides under the foreman's tutelage—"what! I have more than an ordinary interest, founded on curiosity, for a cowboy! Why, Alice, you forget where I was born and bred."

At this pretty Mrs. Alcott had laughed merrily.

"'Born and bred,'" she had repeated. "My dear child, when you come west you must forget that you were born and bred. I did so five years ago. The fact that you are a college girl won't help you half so much as the fact that you are unlearning your eastern method of saddle riding. These westerners don't give a rap concerning your parents or your grandparents. Their interests are all in the present, not the past. As Jimmy says, 'One man is as good as another here and a heap better.' So leave off your condescending airs with Harry Esterly. They are quite lost on him, I assure you."

Edith listened in silence to Mrs. Alcott and watched her as she moved quietly about the living room of the ranch house, which was as cozy and homelike as the exterior was dreary; then she picked up her riding whip, pulled the latch of her sombrero under her chin and with a disdainful little sniff walked out toward the corral, where Harry Esterly awaited her.

Harry watched her keenly as she strolled slowly toward him.

"Gad," he said to himself, "she's well put up!"

And she was—erect and lithe as a young Indian, with hair that shone bronze in the sun, with skin that glowed with health after the morning tub, and with an uptilt to her beautiful head that would well give a thrill of pride to any man on whom she bestowed her friendship.

"Is that Josephine?" she called to Harry as she drew within hailing distance.

"Yes, that's Josephine," answered Harry, patting the smaller horse. "Isn't she a beauty?"

"She is indeed," said the girl, smoothing the soft nose of the pretty mare. "Are you sure she isn't part broncho? Brother Jim says that if a horse has ever so little a drop of broncho blood in him, ever so far back, he's bound to buck at least once in his life. And I don't want to be the one to discover that one drop!"

Harry shook his head. "Well, of course," he said, "it's hard to pick up a horse around here that you can vouch for. But really, Miss Alcott, I think Josephine is as safe as a cradle."

Edith hung her whip on the saddle pommel and, motioning away Harry's offered hand, swung herself into the saddle.

"This morning," he said, "I'm going to take you to my particular pet spot. It's only half an hour's ride from here."

Out they raced across the dusty plain, the horses taking the barbed wire fences as lightly as birds. They drew rein on a lonely little hillock, the only break in the level of the plain for miles around.

"Look," said Harry. "See how one side is scooped out. Some Indian made himself a shelter here, some time from a dust storm. And now stand here on top for a moment and you will see why I like this place."

Edith looked. The slight eminence gave a surprising sweep of view—the far ranch house, with the distant grazing herds, the blue line of haze that marked the mountains and, farther still, the brown of the plain, merging into the blue of the desert. Toward the desert Harry looked apprehensively.

"Miss Edith," he said, "I believe that we'll have a dust storm here in an hour or so. The air felt like it this morning, with this scorching wind, and now I can see it gathering out there on the desert. I wonder if you would be willing to ride in to the ranch alone while I ride out to speak to Mr. Alcott?"

Edith blushed a little. "Why, yes, of course I'll go, but—but I wish you would let me ride your horse back, Mr. Esterly. I'm so afraid Josephine will buck."

"Why, she's as safe as a church. And Billy here used to buck like a jack rabbit. Of course, he's all right now, though."

"Please!" pleaded the girl.

Harry jumped from his horse and helped Edith from the saddle.

"Let me change saddles quickly," he said. "We've no time to waste." And in a few minutes Edith was cantering swiftly toward the ranch house, while Harry rode out toward the distant herd.

Half an hour after Edith reached the house the dust storm was upon them. Whirlpools of dust were hurled upon the house by a howling wind that shook the very rafters.

Hour after hour of intense dry heat, combined with the screeching of the wind, rasped the nerves almost to the breaking point. Edith strolled restlessly from room to room, watching the dust sift in through the closed window and under the doors. Finally she approached Mr. Alcott, who had come in just after the storm broke.

"Has Mr. Esterly come in?" she asked. "Would you mind looking, Jimmy?"

Mr. Alcott sighed patiently and went out into the storm. In a few minutes he returned, looking a little anxious.

"He's not there," he said. "He told me he'd reach here by the time the storm broke. It's letting up a little, and I'll send some of the men out soon, though nothing could have happened to an old timer like Harry."

Edith said nothing, but as the wind lessened she stole softly from the room and out toward the stables. Dusk was just beginning to deepen as she rode swiftly out toward the stopping place of the morning.

"If he got caught he made for that little shelter, I know," she said to herself. "But I know that that Josephine has done something, even if he is a cowboy, and it's all my fault."

She drew rein by the hillock. Back in its shadows sat Harry, pale, but calmly smoking, until he saw the startled eyes of the girl. Edith gave him no time for questions.

"Oh," she moaned, "I knew Josephine would do something!"

Harry glanced in an embarrassed way at his ankle, about which he had awkwardly tied a handkerchief.

"All my own carelessness," he said. "I stood in the saddle to look for the herd and if the blamed little nag didn't buck without a word of warning and threw me. I'll never hear the end of this at the ranch. First horse that's thrown me in five years. They'll find us in a little while. They know this place."

But Edith could not see the humor of the situation.

"I was a selfish, cruel thing," she moaned. "Oh, you poor, poor boy!"

Harry looked at her closely. Then he leaned forward and quietly took possession of her hand.

"Edith," he said softly, "Edith, do you care?"

Edith looked out into the dusk. "A cowboy," she thought, "just a plain cowboy! What would they say?" Then with a deep blush she looked into his face. "Yes," she half whispered, "I'm afraid I do. You see, I always said I'd never marry any but a college man."

"Is that so?" chuckled Harry. "Well, you're keeping your vow. I have a sheepskin kicking around in my stuff somewhere."

"And you never told me!" Edith exclaimed.

Harry looked up in surprise. "Gee," he said, "I'd forgotten all about it."

And he sighed in absolute content as he felt Edith's face against his coat sleeve.

One would think the Laxative idea in a cough syrup should have been advanced long before it was. It seems the only rational remedy for Coughs and Colds would be to move the bowels and clean the mucous membranes of the throat and lungs at the same time. Kennedy's Laxative Honey and Tar does this. It is the Original Laxative Cough, Colds, Croup, Whooping Cough, etc. Tastes good and is harmless. Sold by R. W. Beck.

The tar that is contained in Bee's Laxative Honey and Tar is harmless. It is not coal tar, but is obtained from the pine trees of our own native forests.
